VIRTUAL CAMPAIGN TOOLKIT

Virtual Work Out Class

Consider pairing the workout classes with an overall health challenge—employees can pay $5 to enter the challenge and complete bingo with different health challenges (such as drinking water, walking a mile, etc).

Can offer incentives to employees who participate in the classes (gift cards, company swag, etc). Consider making the incentives fitness-related (such as a fitness tracker or equipment).

May want to consider running idea by company HR first to ensure you are covered in case of injury or accident that occurs during the course.

The more unique or interesting the class is— the more likely people are to join. For instance, if you have an employee who can lead yoga, Zumba, a HIIT class, or other type of unique course, these may attract more individuals. Consider also making the courses at a level that even a novice could participate in, or have different levels depending on experience (beginner vs. advance).

Equity considerations: As with all campaign activities, this challenge should be optional and care should be taken to address negative comments or microaggressions. Access: need access to and ability to use computer and internet, as well as space to perform the exercises that are being taught. Mobility issues: Dependent on the exercise chosen, participants will need to be able to exercise a range of motion, and tolerate sitting or standing for periods of time, bearing weight, and other requirements associated with common exercises. Ability issues: may exclude individuals who suffer from body dysmorphia or other challenges related to body confidence. Could also pose challenges for individuals suffering from anorexia, bulimia nervosa, or other eating disorders.
